

To whom it may concern, and I hope it does:

I consider it a gross invasion of privacy to have the phone ringing off the hook all day and evening.

I have varied work hours and invariably, I'm sleeping, eating, or showering and the phone will ring.

It's never something I need. I have a yellow pages for when I need something. Even if I pay extra every month to have my number unpublished, with this new computer number seeking system, the thing dials randomly without the caller even knowing who they are calling or what market I might fit into.

In the court of law in this country, the laws protect the criminals. When will us victims get a break?

Sincerely, Judith Motts

South Bend, In. 46614

registered voter